SAVE GAME BIRDS OF AMERICA

Federal Authorities Approve Limitations on Shooting.

New regulations on closed seasons for migratory birds have been made public by the United States department of agriculture, after its approval of recommendations by the federal advisory committee on the migratory bird law. The committee met in New York August 7 to draft recommendations to the department. It was appointed by D. F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture, to co-operate with the bureau of biological survey of the department. A statement issued by the committee sets forth the danger that wild game may be exterminated, and appeals for public co-operation in support of the "lardy movements for conservation." The statement includes the following:

The advisory committee has tried to conserve both game and sport. It has been unable to make all the concessions asked. Game is fast vanishing, and some species of it have already become extinct. Others are up on the verge of extermination, facilities for killing it rapidly improve. The number of hunters constantly increases. State laws are in many instances inadequate, and in others feebly enforced. In the judgment of the committee there will be little game left in the United States within a very few years unless the regulations under the federal law are enforced and respected.

Spring shooting has been everywhere refused. It has been adopted as a fixed rule for the present that in no part of the country may there be shooting after the game has started for its breeding grounds in the North. That this works a hardship upon some sections where conditions in the fall are not always available to sport, the committee very well knows. Yet it has not discovered how it can make special concessions to those sections without arousing the rest of the country to demands for the same thing.

It has recommended a maximum shooting season of three and one-half months for any section of the country, and tried to equalize opportunity as best it can in fixing that season.

The committee knows it cannot satisfy every one. It can, however, approximate justice to everyone. It faces in a wasteful country the tremendous task of saving the game. It wants to save it alike for the sportsman of today and the sportsman to come. It asks the people of the country, who have rallied around every one of our tardy movements for conservation to sustain and support it in that effort.

In recommending the regulations, we were controlled by the following considerations:

(1) A most earnest desire to save from certain depletion and threatened annihilation the valuable waterfowl, game, and insectivorous birds which migrate across the United States twice each year.

(2) To accord the hunters in the various States as nearly as possible an equal opportunity of taking migratory waterfowl and nomadic game birds.

(3) To open the season during which these birds can be legally killed in those months when under normal weather and food conditions the largest number of migratory waterfowl and birds sojourn in any particular State.

(4) To absolutely eliminate spring shooting, when migratory waterfowl and birds on the northward migration are journeying towards their breeding grounds, thus impelled by the resistless force of nature to mate, nest, and reproduce their species.

(5) To recognize unusual and extraordinary conditions existing in a few of the States, without affecting the equity or vested rights of the people of the whole country in the migratory wild life.

(6) To submit reasonable, practical, fair, and just regulations that should invite the support of all true conservationists.

(7) To guarantee not only to the present generation a reasonable supply of migratory wild life, but to so protect it that it will multiply and be handed to future generations as their proper and rightful heritage.

The imperative necessity for the enactment of the federal migratory bird law is palpable to every thoughtful and discerning mind. We are convinced that under the operation of this law, shooting will improve each year.

The committee lists some of the wild life that has become extinct or is threatened with the extinction that has overtaken the wild, or passenger, pigeon, that once flew over America in countless millions. The great auk, the Eskimo curlew, the Labrador duck, the Carolina parakeet have been exterminated. There are many other valuable North American birds that are "candidates for extinction." The committee says, including the whooping crane, trumpeter swan, American flamingo, roseate spoonbill, scarlet ibis, long-billed curlew, upland plover, Hudsonian godwit, red-breasted sandpiper, golden plover, dowitcher, willet, pectoral sand-piper, black-capped petrel, American egret, snowy egret, wood duck, hand-tailed pigeon, heath hen, sage grouse, white-tailed kite, prairie sharp-tail, pinnated grouse, and woodcock.

The members of the advisory committee are: John B. Burnham, New York, chairman; Edward G. Bradford, Jr., Delaware; F. W. Chamberlain, W. L. Finley, Oregon; Dr. E. H. Forbush, Massachusetts; Dr. George B. Grinnell, New York; Dr. William T. Hornaday, New York; Clark McAdams, Missouri; Marshall McLean, New York; Clinton M. Odell, Minnesota; T. Gilbert Pearson, New York; Ernest Schaeffer, California; George Shiras, 3d, Michigan; John H. Wallace, Jr., Alabama.

CONDITIONS AT EAGLE PASS

Editor John T. Cushing Gives Credit to Col. Reeves and Men.

"The newspaper fraternity welcomes Editor John T. Cushing back to the editorial chair in the St. Albans Messenger office after his month's sojourn with the Vermont troops on the Mexican border. Editor Cushing is in a position to give his readers some first-hand information about the conditions in the camp of the Vermont troops."—Barre Times.

It may be said in full truth and with absolutely no desire to instill a sense of false security in the minds of relatives of guardsmen that the conditions at Camp Shafter, Eagle Pass, Texas, are very satisfactory. Many officers of the regiment, who have served in the National Guard for years, declare that it is as good a military camp as they have ever seen.

This satisfactory state of affairs is due primarily, of course, to the human equation represented by the men and officers of the regiment. It would be as easy to have a fever camp at Eagle Pass as it was at Chickamauga. The fact that there is absolutely no comparison between the two camps is due to ceaseless effort to keep things right this time.

It is the Messenger's opinion that the regiment is most fortunate in having Col. Ira L. Reeves as its commanding officer. Colonel Reeves has had years of regular army training; knows the peculiarly different positions occupied by officers and men, for he rose from the ranks to company commander in the regulars. The actual life of the enlisted man, therefore, with its many problems which are not faced by the officer, is known to him by experience, and the fruit of that experience is beneficial to the men of the 1st Vermont.

Furthermore, Col. Reeves has seen active service in tropical countries, and here again he knows from experience what should and what should not be done. Many a colonel of the war with Spain would be surprised, perhaps, to see the minute individual attention paid by Col. Reeves to the sanitary conditions of the camp. There is not a day that its every nook and corner is not visited by him, accompanied by the medical officers attached to the regiment under command of Maj. Hagan, and this is a duty that is not delegated to any subordinate officer except in unusual cases.

Col. Reeves' first consideration is of the men, and of the men the first consideration naturally is their health. There is never any let up in the demand for a high standard of sanitation, and the natural course will be constant improvement in conditions. It is a safe prediction that if the men of the regiment fall victims to disease it will be through no fault of their own, but will be due to carelessness in near-by camps, which seems most unlikely, as all outfits are striving for a health record.

But of course Col. Reeves could not bring about satisfactory conditions and maintain them unassisted. He has in all his efforts the hearty co-operation of the officers and the men of the regiment. The personnel of the 1st Vermont is indeed a high one. To be modest, it is a regiment at least a little out of the ordinary. Colonel Reeves states that it has the best personnel of any regiment with which he has ever served, either within or without the regular service. Battalion and company commanders as a rule are as watchful as the colonel himself, and there is a unity of purpose that accounts for the splendid record the regiment is making. The men are as proud of the outfit as the officers themselves, and when this is said one pays as high a compliment as is possible, both to the officers and the men themselves.

The water supply at Eagle Pass proper is good. The water is taken from the regular city reservoir, and is drawn through a filtration plant. The food is good and ample. Opportunities for maintaining bodily cleanliness are excellent. The heat is terrific in the mid hours of the day, but then as many men as possible take it as easy as possible. The daily schedule of drills is laid out with this feature in mind.

The Messenger believes this is a faithful picture of physical conditions at Eagle Pass. Given that a soldier went out in good condition, blessed with a sound digestive apparatus such a one should experience a minimum of difficulties. Some sickness is to be expected. So many men could not be brought together anywhere or under any conditions without there being sickness. That some men went out who were not physically fitted is beyond question true, due to the precipitated haste in which the regiment was bundled off for the border, time for adequate examination of the men not being given. But in brief, the conditions at Eagle Pass are most reassuring and reflect credit on all concerned, from the lowest ranking private in the rear rank to the colonel in command.—St. Albans Messenger.

SWITZERLAND OF AMERICA

Familiarity Blurs Edge of Appreciation for Vermonters.

Vermont has often been called the Switzerland of America, but how few even of our own citizens realize the full meaning of that designation. Familiarity of it does not breed contempt, at least blurs the keen edge of appreciation. And so it comes to pass that multitudes of native Vermonters are living in the proximity of some of Nature's grandest scenery utterly oblivious of the panorama spread out before their very eyes.

Such has been our experience after many years' residence in the Green Mountain state. I have realized the ravishing beauty of the local scenery but had no idea of the sublimities that lie all about us, until on this year's vacation I took the auto stage trip across the mountains to White River Junction. The day was ideal, the stage commodious and easy riding, the company congenial, as we swiftly left the city behind us and began the ascent to the backbone of the hills.

The difference between the horse-drawn carriage and the powerful tireless machine is at once apparent, and there is a sense of repose and vitality at once experienced by all the passengers.

Up and up we climb, swinging around curves, dashing over resounding bridges, past snug farm houses with summer visitors on verandas and brown-cheeked children romping in the yard, flinging out a package here, a newspaper there, a letter in a mail box now and then, the mountain drawing nearer and nearer constantly until the driver announces the summit, and we halt for a moment on the tip top of all creation.

Then the powerful engine begins to purr and over the summit we plunge. We hold our breaths for an instant as down we slide. The road is smooth though steep as a house roof, down we go, under trees which overarch the highway for rods at a time, by the side of gorges in the far depths of which we catch glimpses of sparkling brooks below, dashing into clearings where on either side the mountains towered, buttressing the skies; whirling through peaceful little hamlets asleep in great nature's lap; pausing at isolated postoffices for exchange letters from the outside world, then dashing on while the glorious panorama of nature unfolds with every turn of the ever winding road. This, all this, is at our very doors.
